Our editorial standards

Tindle Newspapers and its staff take very seriously the responsibility to publish material which is accurate and from trustworthy sources. Authenticity is paramount and every effort is made to offer all parties mentioned in stories the chance to comment pre-publication.

Rights of reply are always given and inaccuracies are corrected at the earliest opportunity.

Tindle Newspapers prides itself on being a fair, responsible, local newspaper group, which is close to its readers. Coverage of councils, courts and public meetings is still carried out by Tindle journalists.

All Tindle Newspaper journalists are aware that stories must be verified before publication. No leads are treated as reliable until they are checked and authenticated.

Tindle Newspapers has a contract with Foot Anstey for pre-publication legal guidance and advice. Tindle also subscribes to the News Media Association's legal advice service. All senior editorial staff make use of these services when necessary.

Guidance has, in the past, been sought from IPSO, and all editorial staff at Tindle Newspapers are aware that they can contact IPSO pre and post-publication to seek advice and guidance.

Training

All editorial staff in Tindle Newspapers are issued with copies of the Editors' Code, including new copies when the code is updated. Journalists are also told in their job offer letter that Tindle is contractually signed up to the IPSO Code of Practice. All journalists are aware of the IPSO hotline that they are entitled to ring.

In-house, on-the-job training is given to all journalists, plus regular law courses are held with external trainers, usually from PA. Also PA is used for reporter and newsdesk training where necessary and, on occasion, external trainers are brought in to do group training at selected centres.

Tindle Newspapers does not have company-wide internal manuals, codes or guidance for journalists. Each centre issues its own guidance to staff, through the editor. This includes guidance on use of the IPSO code, and information and training on any changes to the code.

Our complaints-handling process

All of our papers and websites carry details of our complaints procedure, of how people can make complaints and also of how people can complain to IPSO. This information is in the same section in our newspapers every week; and there is a special section on our websites. There is a complaint form on our websites, which generates an e-mail to the editor of each of our titles. Complaints can be made by phone, letter, e-mail or in person. However, we do insist that more serious complaints are in writing.

Minor complaints are dealt with by the reporter who has written the story or by the newsdesk. If a complainant wants to speak to someone more senior, or if the complaint is more serious, then they are put in contact with the editor or deputy editor of the publication concerned. All complaints are dealt with speedily and with full discussion with the complainant. Every attempt is made to resolve complaints amicably.

All complaints are documented and logged as soon as they are received. Each Tindle centre has a complaints book for such incidences. Complaints are also discussed in editorial meetings to see if editorial practices need to be reviewed or adjusted.

If a complaint cannot be resolved and is referred to IPSO, then it is the editor of that publication who takes charge of the process. All IPSO complaints are also reported to the Tindle Newspaper Board.

Our record on compliance

No complaints against any Tindle Newspapers were upheld by IPSO during 2015.
