Our editorial standards

Landor LINKS prides itself on being expert, authoritative and independent. The inhouse editors are all long-term employees while the freelance correspondents, sector contributors and columnists we work with are experts in their field.

Overview of the publisher's approach to editorial standards

The Landor LINKS approach is to report on the sectors we cover in an impartial and independent manner. Our editors write news, analysis, features and diary items based on contact with primary sources, experts in the field, etc.

Where press releases or other media form the starting point of a story, every effort is made to corroborate facts. When drawing on other media we always seek to cite those secondary sources.

Where a journal carries a commercial supplement, this is flagged up as either a 'sponsored supplement' or 'advertising feature'.

Seeking editorial guidance from IPSO

Landor LINKS has not yet needed to seek pre-publication guidance from IPSO. However, our journalists have been informed that they can contact IPSO if they need guidance before publication, on the Editor's Code or on public interest exceptions.

We have circulated the IPSO Editor's Code to all editors and regular writing staff and also given them the link to the IPSO helpline as found at: https://www.ipso.co.uk/IPSO/contactus.html

In what circumstances would it seek/has it sought guidance from IPSO?

We took note of the positive feedback to our first report to IPSO and have included suggested improvements in this year's report.

Our complaints handling process

The nature of publishing means that stories will generate requests for clarifications and corrections as well as formal complaints. These will be made in the form of emails, phone calls and letters sent directly to the relevant editors or to the company.

Where a complaint is made, the relevant editor is tasked with establishing the nature of the complaint. It is often the case that a conversation or personal correspondence resolves the issue. Sometimes the complainant is content with: writing a letter for publication; seeing an amendment made to the story online; or, if in print, a clarification/correction printed in the next available issue.

However, where a complaint holds the potential, however remote, to result in a legal claim that complaint will be referred to the Managing Director. This will enable a suitable response to be discussed and acted upon. Where a complaint seems likely to escalate, or is initially made using terms such as 'I have been libelled', the relevant editor will alert the Company Secretary and Managing Director who will refer the complaint to our insurer's legal advisors. Once a complaint has involved the Company Secretary and, by extension, our insurer, a formal record is kept.

We have also made the editorial team aware of IPSO's guidelines on keeping original copies where there have been complaints about online content.

During the period this report covers (2015) there were no instances where contact with our insurer was required.

What information is provided to readers, and where, about its internal process for editorial complaints and IPSO's complaints process:

The company's membership of IPSO is not currently advertised online or in print. Should a complainant's initial concerns not be resolved they will be informed of our membership of IPSO.

Our training process

Landor LINKS continually reviews the skillsets of its staff and the training needs of the company. Our core editors and contributors are well established within the company and their fields. Our editors — who act as gatekeepers — have a good working knowledge of journalistic standards. They share experience and concerns with one another and also communicate this to newer staff and freelance contributors.

Several of our editors have undergone formal NCTJ approved courses and have attended courses on sub-editing, media law, online working and feature writing at London College of Communications and similar bodies. The editors are also encouraged to attend events and seminars run by organisations such as the Periodical Publishers' Association and relevant publishing trade events.

Where a member of staff expresses a need to update their understanding or skills, we work with them as part of a Personal Development Plan approach to HR. We are looked at whether a more formal approach was needed, with particular reference to the online and social media spheres.

We have ensured that editors and reporters responsible for signing off printed materials and posting online content have been sent copies of the IPSO Editor's Code and also the 2014-15 annual report Landor LINKS sent to IPSO. The editorial team has also been made aware of IPSO's updated recommendations on handling complaints about online content, including the need to retain a copy of the original online content.

Training programmes the publisher has run in the relevant period, including perhaps relevant materials:

Over the past year editorial staff have not had to attend external courses.

Confirmation of what proportion of staff have undergone the training programme: Over the past year editorial staff have not had to attend external courses.

Details of any plans for further training, if any.

With our editorial staff now increasingly using online channels to communicate as well as research, we believe there is a need to source training and advice on the best and proper use of websites (such as our own www.TransportXtra.com service) as well as social media (Twitter, Facebook, LinkedIn, etc.). We hope to identify suitable training providers over the coming months.
